Theories and Politics of International Migration: Understanding the Mediterranean Migration Crisis

30 March-1 May, 2015. On-Campus week 13-17 April, 2015
Course Directors: Professor Peo Hansen and Associate Professor Branka Likic-Brboric.

The course explores theoretical and empirical aspects of international migration, including the issues of migrant incorporation, multiculturalism and integration, and it familiarizes students with developments at different levels (e.g. global, regional, national and local), as well as with the important interlinkages between these. The course includes a focus on the Mediterranean area where recent political instabilities have increased migration and the number of asylum seekers and where states and international organizations are developing new policies and mechanisms of border control to address the situation.

Deadline March 9, 2015

International Migration, Ethnicity and Gender: Intersectional Perspectives on Labour, Power, and Citizenship

4 May-5 June, 2015. On-Campus week 18 -22 May Course directors: Research Fellow Anna Bredström, and Professor Diana Mulinari, University of Lund.

This course draws on a variety of theoretical approaches to explore the centrality of gender at different levels of the migration process. It pursues an intersectional analysis and focus on how articulations of class, ethnicity, gender/sexuality and generation shape the experiences of migrants across Europe. Questions concerning international migration, citizenship rights, gender relations and the global economy are discussed.
